Neo-Nazism on rise in Germany

BONN, West Germany (UPI) — Neo-Nazism is on the rise in West Germany, with higher membership in militant neo-Nazi groups taking strength
away from extreme right-wing political groups.

There has been an increase in membership
in "small, militant neo-Nazi groups without a firm organizational structure" since 1974,
Interior Minister Ger-
bert Baum said yesterday.

This has led to an increase in violence, including bombings.

D.O.A.

The movie D.O.A., now playing at better Cineplexes around town, is an interesting collage of interviews, action shots, and concert footage. The concert footage of mainly the Sex Pistols, with some Sham 69, X-Ray Spex, Generation X, and the Dead Boys, is too few and far between for my tastes. The director, Lech Kowalski, seems to like to put long sequences of boring, anti-punk comment in between the fantastic concert footage. The only pro-punk comments come from an english punk(?) named Terry. Instead of giving him so much screen time, Kowalski should have taken only his worthwhile comments (which would be very little). The only non-concert footage of the Pistols is where Steve and Paul get on an elevator and Paul says he thinks America is shit, and the infamous Sid and Nancy "interview". Most of the time Sid sleeps deeply while Nancy rambles on about various boring topics. On a few rare occasions

Sid straightens up long enough to say "What was the question?". This sequence is a very sorry picture of what super-punk(ha,ha,ha) Sid was actually like. The Pistols concert shots are too infrequent to act as an effective backdrop for the movie, as Kowalski had intended. Thus the story is left without any continuity or linear structure. Though a lot of the Pistols songs were left intact, Kowalski sliced some of the shots to shreds, like Winterland's Liar, or Holidays in the Sun. He also sliced the small amount of Dead Boys footage he had, to shreds.

Personally, I think that D.O.A. could have been a much better movie if the interviews had been used as a brief change of pace from the concert footage, rather than it being the other way around.

What kind of life
is this for a child?

"THEY REALIZED THAT THEIR GOD WAS DEAD SO THEY RECLAIMED POWER THROUGH THE BOMB INSTEAD"

What kind of freedom is it when you must live under the threat of being fried to a crisp at the whim of people who you know nothing about, for reasons that you would probably never know. It seems to be just another method of keeping the people scared enough to remain loyal to the people in power. Religion had worked for a long time but when people began to see the lies in that, the government had to find another way of keeping the people terrified. What could be better than to create a device that could annihilate entire cities of people in one shot. People do not have to live under that kind of threat.

How sickening it is to be born into the world only to realize that it is ruled by madmen with their middle fingers itching to prove that they are bigger.
